This path, which runs through the Corona Forestal Natural Park, reveals a series of pumice stone columns that stand like capricious pinnacles on both sides of the ravine.

This spectacular landscape is the result of the erosion of volcanic materials that the passage of time has been in charge of shaping at will, and that contrasts with the large green pine trees around it.

Part of this circular route, which begins in the Plaza Doctor Pérez Cáceres in Vilaflor, runs along the Camino Real de Chasna, a passageway between the north and south slopes of the island, existing since the pre-Hispanic period.

This path constitutes an ancestral route already traveled by the Guanche shepherds and their herds of goats and sheep. At the beginning of the summer season they moved their herds to the summits of the island to take advantage of the abundant summer pastures of Las Cañadas.
